ROAD RACER

The Gotham City Diamond Reserve was being robbed by big time crooks, Vic Bunson and Charlie Ash.

They had disabled the vault's alarm but had not noticed a second, silent one that was linked to police headquarters.

QUICK!
GET TO THE CAR!

Police Commissioner Gordon and his men were already on the scene as the thieves jumped into their getaway car, driven by Frank Moss.

Bunson and Ash had hired Moss, a professional getaway driver, especially for this job.

Moss was a legend in the criminal underworld. He had driven getaway cars in hundreds of robberies across the country and had never been caught.

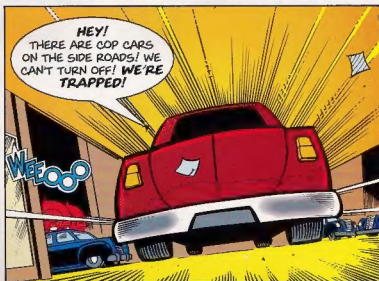

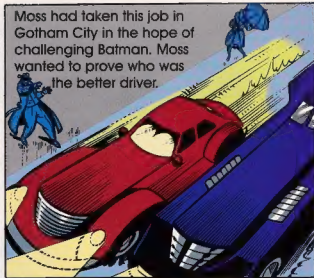

He was the best in the business.
He could out race anyone...

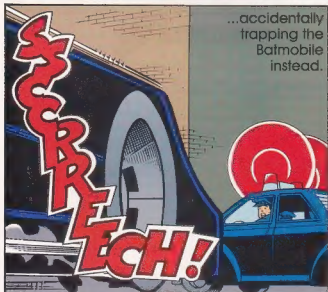

...or so he thought.

With nerves of steel, Moss drove between the police cars, seconds before they closed in...

...accidentally trapping the Batmobile instead.

The crooks were celebrating their escape...

Green Lantern is up against aliens forces in...

PLANETFALL

The clear night skies over the deserts of Nevada, USA, were cut by a blinding trail of light as something shot out of the heavens and hurtled like a comet towards the Earth. Suddenly, there was a boom that shook the ground and echoed around the surrounding hills. Something had made planetfall. A short time later, a pale, glowing disc slid down out of the stars, following the trail of the meteor.

Kyle Rayner was at home in New York City watching his favourite television show, when a news flash about the meteor appeared on the screen. As Green Lantern, Kyle had visited outer space many times, and he knew there were plenty of strange things that could fall out of the sky. "I'd better check this out," thought Kyle as he used his amazing power ring to turn into Green Lantern.

Less than an hour later, Green Lantern flew over the Nevada landscape, slicing low and fast, hugging the ground like a cruise missile. He saw that the United States Air Force was already on the scene: there were jeeps and trucks around the crater the meteor had made when it hit the Earth. Marines were patrolling the area, and a large mobile HQ had been set up nearby. Overhead, two helicopter gunships circled the site.

Marines rushed forward, guns raised, as Green Lantern landed. Even though they recognised the green, black and white costume of one of Earth's greatest heroes, they had been ordered to keep everyone out.

"At ease, men!" barked an officer. "I'm Major Greaves," he said, introducing himself to Kyle. "I'm in charge of the site. Follow Me."

Green Lantern and Major Greaves walked to the mobile HQ. "What's with all the security?" Kyle asked. "This is no ordinary meteor, right?"

"Correct," replied the Major. "I'm not supposed to let anyone in here, but my scientists are stumped. Maybe you can help."

Inside the mobile HQ, Kyle saw the meteor sitting on a platform. It was a rock about the size of a football, and it glowed with a sickly mauve light. Scientists scurried around it, running tests.

"All that we've been able to discover is that the rock contains a powerful energy source, and that it's breaking down," Greaves explained. "The rock is starting to release the energy."

Just then there was a commotion outside. Green Lantern and the Major rushed outside and found six, huge alien warriors standing by the crater. The aliens wore armoured space suits and carried glowing energy weapons.

"We can't let them get the rock," shouted the Major to his soldiers.

"Wait," said Kyle. "Your weapons won't do much against the aliens' armour. Besides, they may not be as mean as they look. Let me try to talk to them."

"You're the super hero," said the Major with a frown.

Kyle stepped towards the aliens. "Um, welcome to Earth," he said. The leader of the aliens looked at him and then held up a small handheld device.

"Give us back rock!" came a rasping voice from the small device. Green Lantern realised that it was some kind of language translator.

"In rock. Evil god. Want release. Destroy world. Give us back rock!"

That did not sound good at all.

"Can we talk about this?" said the Green Lantern, trying to sound less nervous than he was.

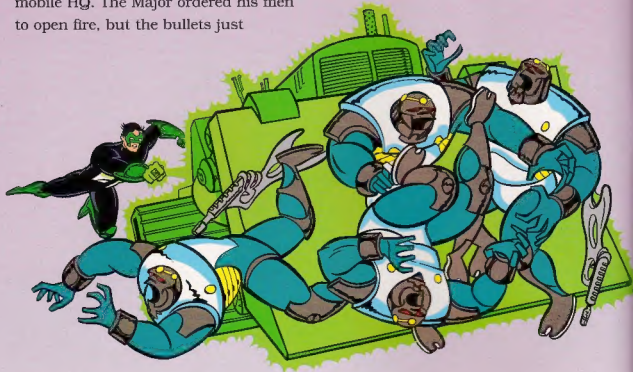

The aliens were impatient and had obviously had enough of talking. One pointed his energy weapon at Kyle.

"Aside stand!" barked the translator, and a moment later Green Lantern was hurtled backwards by a blast of energy.

The aliens raced towards the mobile HQ. The Major ordered his men to open fire, but the bullets just bounced off the aliens' armour.

Green Lantern leapt up. The aliens' weapon had only given him a mild jolt, just enough to knock him down. From what the aliens had said, it sounded like they were going to release an evil entity from the rock that was going to destroy the world.

"No way am I letting that happen," thought Green Lantern as he flew like a rocket towards the aliens. Kyle used his power ring to project a shield of green light that deflected the weapon fire. Then he formed a bulldozer with his ring and slammed through their ranks, knocking the aliens over like tenpins.

Before they could recover, he scooped them up in a green catapult and hurled them away from the site. The squawking aliens disappeared over a hill half a mile away.

Green Lantern was sure their armour would protect them from the rough landing. He just wanted them out of the way long enough to do something with the meteor.

"I heard what the alien said," Major Greaves said, "and I checked it with our scientists. Sensors show an energy gateway inside the rock. There is something on the other side trying to get through. If the rock breaks apart, the gateway will open!"

Inside the HQ, the meteor was blazing with mauve light now. There wasn't much time left. "If the aliens want to open the gate," Kyle thought, "then I have to do the opposite." He encased the meteor with a lattice of green energy from his ring, holding the rock together and keeping the gateway shut. It was working, but it took all of his concentration. What would he do if the aliens returned?

Suddenly, there was an explosion outside. The aliens were back! Green Lantern's heart sank as he saw the aliens burst into the HQ. He braced for their attack. There was nothing he could do without releasing his hold on the rock. But to his surprise, the aliens lent their power to his and helped to bind the meteor. In seconds, a lattice of awesome energy wrapped around the rock, sealing it shut.

The meteor was safely contained. The aliens carefully put it in a specially armoured box made out of a strange metal. Then the leader turned to Green Lantern and raised his translator device.

"Think translator not good words make," he said.

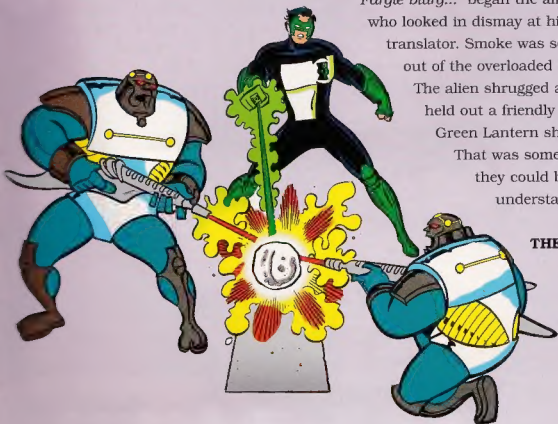

Green Lantern smiled. "You were trying to warn me. You didn't want to release the evil in the rock. You wanted to stop it from getting free."

The alien nodded stiffly. "We promised to never let evil god free. Chased him to your planet. To stop him. Now we keep him safe."

"I'm glad we could help each other," said Green Lantern. "If we had been able to communicate better, maybe we could have avoided the confusion."

"Fargle blurg..." began the alien, who looked in dismay at his translator. Smoke was seeping out of the overloaded device. The alien shrugged and held out a friendly hand. Green Lantern shook it. That was something they could both understand.

ATTACK OF THE ROBOT

Lex Luthor was out for revenge. He had been forced to leave his job as the boss of LexCorp, Metropolis's largest company. From his secret hiding place somewhere in the city, he decided that if he could not run LexCorp, he would destroy it.

Far away in Fawcett City, Billy Batson was with his class at a technology fair. He was looking at LexCorp's new laser when some men broke into the exhibition.

Sensing trouble, Billy rushed into a corner of the exhibition hall and said the magic word.

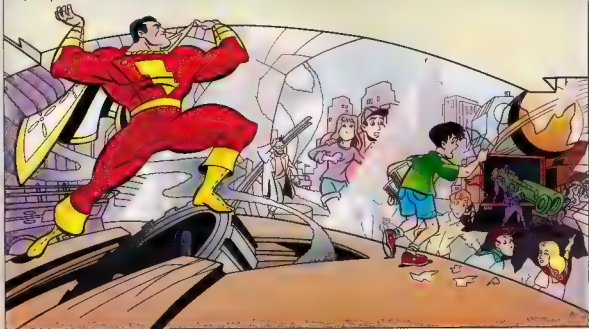

and instantly turned into Captain Marvel, the World's Mightiest Mortal.

When Captain Marvel confronted the thieves, they aimed the laser beam at the ceiling. The roof began to fall inwards.

Captain Marvel used his incredible strength to hold up the ceiling while people escaped from the crumbling building. He could see the thieves as they stole the laser. As they drove off, Captain Marvel noticed their truck had a Metropolis license plate.

Meanwhile, Wonder Woman was at the scene of a raging fire in Gateway City.

THE BUILDING'S BEEN EVACUATED BUT SERGEANT YALE'S TRAPPED INSIDE.

Wonder Woman found Sergeant Yale trapped beneath a burning beam in the building. The firefighter was wearing a radio-controlled, fireproof LexSuit by LexCorp which protected her from the flames.

DON'T WORRY, YOU'LL SOON BE SAFE.

Kyle used his power ring to become Green Lantern.

Then he created a giant pterodactyl to grab the helicopter. But the helicopter launched eight missiles.

Green Lantern created a giant octopus to catch the missiles. The helicopter got away with the crane while he held the missiles.

In Metropolis, Clark Kent was at the showing of LexCorp's new ultrasonic cannon. Suddenly, some thugs ran in and seized the cannon.

As Clark changed into Superman the thieves used the cannon to strike at an office building which started to collapse. The cannon's sonic blast also stunned Superman.

As rescue workers helped Sergeant Yale, some men stole the LexSuit. As they ran away, Wonder Woman heard one of them mention the name of Lex Luthor.

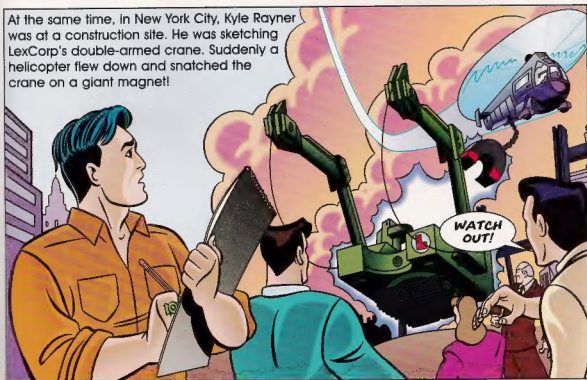

LUTHOR! I'LL FIND THAT VILLAIN AS SOON AS I PUT OUT THIS FIRE!

LUTHOR'S NOT PAYING US ENOUGH TO TAKE HER ON. LET'S GET OUT OF HERE!

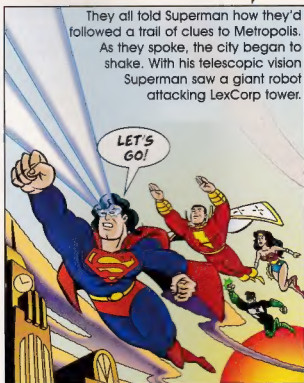

At the same time, in New York City, Kyle Rayner was at a construction site. He was sketching LexCorp's double-armed crane. Suddenly a helicopter flew down and snatched the crane on a giant magnet!

WATCH OUT!

Superman recovered in time to save the building just as Captain Marvel, Wonder Woman and Green Lantern arrived.

They all told Superman how they'd followed a trail of clues to Metropolis. As they spoke, the city began to shake. With his telescopic vision Superman saw a giant robot attacking LexCorp tower.

As the heroes approached, the robot blasted them out of the sky. The heroes saw that the robot was made from all the stolen LexCorp equipment.

Green Lantern created a vice to trap the robot. Wonder Woman and Captain Marvel attacked from the sides. Superman ripped apart the cannon and laser from above.

The robot was no match for the Super Hero team. Once the robot was disabled, Superman could hear the radio signal that controlled it.
